Group defends prostitutes' call for decriminalization

Softening law would allow sex workers to change jobs and access health care, social services more easily; POWER

A group that represents prostitutes in the capital region is bringing the views of those sex workers to the Ontario Court of Appeal this week.

Today, the federal and provincial governments will begin their appeal of a judge's ruling that struck down laws criminalizing operating or working in a brothel, communicating for the purpose of prostitution and living off the avails of prostitution.

Last year Superior Court Judge Susan Himel ruled the criminal code provisions unconstitutional because they endanger sex workers.

Lawyers for POWER (Prostitutes of Ottawa/Gatineau Work, Educate, Resist) and Maggie's — a Toronto-based group that also represents sex workers — will be making a unique argument based "extensive consultation" with sex workers, said Frédérique Chabot, vice-chair of POWER.

The group argues sex work is a person's choice, concerning their own body and sexuality and can represent "independence or empowerment or a job that a person chooses to do for reasons that work for them," said Chabot.

That won't be heard from any of the interveners in the case, Chabot said.

POWER is going to court to support the three women who launched the constitutional challenge five years ago.

The group wants to see sex work completely decriminalized, which it says will allow sex workers to operate in safer environments without getting criminal records, Chabot said. JESSICA SMITH

Police say alcohol, speed factors in fatal crash

Alcohol and excessive speed contributed to the motorcycle collision that killed 21-year-old Tony Adamo early Saturday morning, police say, but that contrasts sharply with the picture painted by two of his cousins who visited a makeshift memorial set up at the site of the crash.

"He was always very responsible young man," said Amanda Nicolini, yesterday. Nicolini, who visited the site with her cousin Lisa Deganutti, recalled babysitting Adamo when he was a newborn.

"He was a very dynamic person, adventurous, artsy," said Nicolini.

"He had so many interests," said Deganutti. She said Adamo's family is overwhelmed with grief.

At about 2:30 a.m., Adamo was driving his bike west on the Longfield Drive extension, but lost control on the curve, said Sgt. Michael Herasimenko yesterday.

Paramedics said he hit a culvert head-on. When they arrived, they found him trapped under the motorcycle and pronounced him dead from a head injury.

Several witnesses to the crash became emotionally distraught and were also treated by paramedics at the scene.

Only a little rain falls on annual Telus Walk to Cure Diabetes

Claire Gravelle and her friends got together yesterday — wearing their tutus and "Team Claire" T-shirts — to hold hands, skip and walk.

Why?

"For my diabetes," said Claire.

More than 2,000 people joined Claire and her friends at Queen Juliana Park yesterday for the 2011 Telus Walk to Cure Diabetes.

"My daughter was diagnosed with diabetes two and a half years ago, just after her fifth birthday. We're walking to try to raise a cure for diabetes," said Claire's mom, Michelle Gravelle.

"Walking with my friends."

CLAIRE GRAVELLE, 7, ON WHAT SHE LIKES MOST ABOUT THE FUNDRAISER

Team Claire raised over $3,000 and the walk raised more than $220,000 for the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation this year. All the money goes to researching a cure and educating people about the disease.

"I don't see a cure in the near future, but I am hopeful that as she becomes an adult, there will be something that makes it easier for her to manage her diabetes," said Michelle Gravelle. "Even compared to 20 years ago, they've come along way."

Bail granted for former professor

Hassan Diab, a former University of Ottawa professor whom French authorities accuse of bombing a Paris synagogue has been granted bail, according to a Facebook page set up by his supporters.

"Although details of the new bail packet are not known yet, it is expected he will be allowed to return to home and hearth on Tuesday, June 14," says a note posted on the Friends of Hassan Diab Facebook page. Diab was taken into custody last week after being committed for extradition to face the charges. Diab is appealing the decision.

Westfest connects community

Westboro's annual three-day festival celebrates Canadian art and culture

"My favourite part is the community and seeing all our friends and people we haven't seen for a while."
KILEY TURNER, WESTFEST ATTENDEE

Whether it was the Bollywood dancing or outdoor chess games, there was something for everyone at Westfest this year, and business owners say it was one of the biggest turnouts to date.

"I think Ottawa people just love to be outdoors and to see other people," said Kelly Kelaher, branch manager of Adventure Travel Company in Westboro. She said she saw twice as many people as she did at last year's festival.

"Westboro is just the up-and-coming sweet spot for Ottawa right now," she said.

The tent outside her Richmond Road store was busier on Saturday as passersby inquired about their safaris and volunteer programs.

Michael Corbeil experienced the same pedestrian traffic outside his 14-year-old flower shop, Tivoli.

"The best part of Westfest is that the streets are closed to traffic," said Corbeil. "We put our stuff out there and people are happy, they're getting bargains."

The three-day festival, which celebrates Canadian art and culture, wrapped up on Sunday with a performance by Rwandan/Burundian musician, Mighty Popo. Other headliners this year included Bif Naked, Lucie Idlout and Tanya Agaq.

▶ Jessica Ernst, an oil-patch consultant, alleges that EnCana broke multiple provincial laws and regulations and contaminated a shallow aquifer with natural gas and toxic industry-related chemicals. Ernst burns off some of the methane that is in her well water in Rosebud, Alta., on June 2.

No fracking way?

Alberta woman says natural-gas fracking to blame for flaming well water Method is an industry mainstay

Jessica Ernst fills the empty water-cooler bottle from her garden hose. The liquid bubbles and hisses like club soda and a thick white cloud floats to the top.

Something isn't right with the well water on her Alberta property.

What happens when she removes the cap from the bottle and drops in a lit wooden match is even more disconcerting. There's a loud poof and a flash of blue flame. Ernst quickly snatches her hand away.

"I've done that hundreds, probably thousands, of times and I can't help but move," she apologizes.

She repeats the procedure. This time, it's a yellow flame that lasts a little bit longer. Ernst jokes that it's her magic trick. "I might just have to take this act on the road to pay for my legal fees," she laughs.

Ernst has filed a multi-million-dollar lawsuit against energy-giant EnCana, Alberta Environment and the Energy Resources Conservation Board in which she accuses them of negligence and unlawful activities.

The 54-year-old environmental consultant in the oil and gas industry blames her water problems on shallow gas wells that were drilled near Rosebud, Alta., eight years ago using a method called hydraulic fracturing, also known as fracking. It involves blasting water, chemicals and sand deep underground to break up coal formations and release natural gas.

The oil and gas industry defends the long-standing and increasingly common practice as a highly regulated and safe way to tap gas supplies that are otherwise hard to reach.

But controversy swirls, fuelled by lawsuits such as the one Ernst has filed and by mass media attention such as the 2010 documentary film Gasland, which focused on communities in the United States affected by natural gas drilling.

LEAD POLLUTION

Hundreds sickened in China

Over 600 people, including 103 children, have been sickened in China's latest case of mass lead poisoning, state media reported yesterday.

China has suffered widespread problems in recent years from heavy metal contamination, with thousands of children affected by lead poisoning in several provinces in 2009 and 2010 because they lived near metal smelters or battery factories.

The victims in the latest case were workers and their children in 25 family-run tinfoil processing workshops in Yangxunqiao town in Zhejiang province in eastern China, the official Xinhua News Agency reported.

Xinhua said tests showed that 26 adults and all 103 children have severe lead poisoning, while 494 others have moderate poisoning.

HOME ICE ADVANTAGE

On the verge of its first Stanley Cup in Canucks history, Vancouver quietly passes a dark milestone — tonight is the 125th anniversary of the night the city burned to the ground.

The Great Fire of June 13, 1886, blazed through Vancouver's mostly timbered shacks and reduced the new city (it was only two months old) to ash.

Downtown Vancouver is a different sort of tinderbox today, one sparking with nervous excitement: The whole city seems to be holding its breath for the game.

Across the province, people exhaled with wild, happy celebration after Game 5. More than 100,000 people celebrated in downtown streets.

First photos of Gabrielle Giffords show congresswoman smiling, few signs of gunshot wound She could be released from rehab facility this month

SOUTHWESTPHOTOBANK.COM, P.K. WEIS/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Images of a smiling U.S. Rep. Gabrielle Giffords were posted early yesterday on her Facebook page, two photos that show her with shorter, darker hair but few signs that she suffered a gunshot wound to the head.

The photos were taken May 17 outside the Houston rehabilitation facility, TIRR Memorial Hermann, where Giffords has been undergoing intensive treatment since she was wounded five months ago at a meet-and-greet event with constituents. Six people died and a dozen others were wounded in the Jan. 8 attack in Tucson, Ariz.

Since then, access to the Arizona congresswoman has been tightly controlled. Until yesterday, no clear images had been released.

Giffords spokesman C.J. Karamargin said staff members released the photos yesterday to help satisfy "intense interest in the congresswoman's appearance."

The photos capture her ecstatic mood following her astronaut husband's space-shuttle launch in May.

"She got to see her husband successfully ride a rocket into space," Karamargin said. "So who wouldn't be pleased?"

He added: "I think this photo speaks volumes about the congresswoman's resilience and recovery.

"It shows someone in very good spirits, someone who is happy, someone who has a very positive attitude."

Manitoba seeks help for farmers

'The Interlake has been under water for the last three or four years,' Agriculture Ministry analyst says

After four soggy years of flooded pastures and ruined crops, the Manitoba government is looking at how to help frustrated farmers cope with climate change in the province's Interlake region.

The province has quietly issued a request for proposals for a study on how to deal with "excess moisture on agricultural lands" in the area sandwiched between Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipeg, north of the provincial capital. The study is to include a look at drainage policy, crop insurance and best practices by affected farmers.

The government is also looking to the future. It wants a weather forecast "with emphasis on soil moisture extremes, including risk of flooding/excess moisture and drought events."

"We have nothing. The atmosphere ... is total despair."
DAVE SHOTT, ARBORG AREA FARMER

Many frustrated farmers say the proposed study is too little, too late, but the province says it's an important part of coming up with a strategy to help beleaguered producers.

This spring has been particularly bad as the province struggled for weeks to contain the swollen Assiniboine River. That water has now flowed into Lake Manitoba where it has swallowed up hundreds of hectares of farmland along its shores. The lake isn't expected to crest until July. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Released report tells the tale of frustrated environmental executives

They gave their time and expertise, but all they got back was radio silence.

That's the big gripe of business leaders who advised the government on talks between Canada and the United States to cut greenhouse gases.

Interviews with participants in the so-called Clean Energy Dialogue are peppered with complaints from executives about a lack of feedback from the feds.

Notes from those interviews were released to The Canadian Press, along with a consultant's report to Environment Canada, under the Access to Information Act.

They provide a window into industry's discontent.

"If you take them there and there is no follow up then what are they supposed to think? This sends the wrong message and they expect to be kept involved," one interviewee told the consultant.

The same person grumbled about the aloofness of politicians and senior officials on trips to the United States.

"The minister and the deputy don't travel at the back of the plane ... they have created a poor process to engage experts."

Prime Minister Stephen Harper announced the Clean Energy Dialogue with Barack Obama two years ago during the U.S. president's maiden trip to Ottawa. It's an effort by the two countries to work together on clean energy technologies to reduce greenhouse gases and cope with climate change.

OMB MAKES CONVENIENT VILLAIN

URBAN COMPASS

STEVE COLLINS
METRO OTTAWA

The Ontario Municipal Board came in for its customary share of opprobrium last week when it handed developers yet another victory over the city, this time over expansion of the urban boundary.

City council, in an attempt to limit sprawl and increase density, had voted to free up 230 hectares of new land for suburban housing, less than the 850 recommended by city staff. The council limit was about one-tenth of what developers wanted, so they appealed to the OMB.

The enduring unpopularity of the OMB, a powerful body of provincial appointees that often quashes the decisions of elected officials in favour of developers, makes it a convenient villain.

In January, when council voted to fight the developers at the hearing, Mayor Jim Watson defined the issue this way: "It determines at the end of the day who's going to make the decisions with respect to growth and urban planning, and I believe it should be the elected officials."

"The city has a vital interest in limiting far-flung suburbs, which strain our resources to service and add more commuters to the roads ... but it was risky to disregard the advice and research of city staff."

Well, we got our answer on that question last Monday. The OMB ruled the expansion would be 850 hectares, the number originally suggested by city staff.

Innes Coun. Rainer Bloess, who voted alone against fighting the case at the OMB, saw the inconsistency between council and staff numbers as the fatal weakness in the city's case.

"Basically, they used our own numbers and they used our own projections against us, so it's hard to blame the OMB on this one," he said. "I think the OMB made a valid decision and they based it purely, strictly on facts, whereas council I think sort of made an emotional decision."

The city's lawyers had estimated the appeal would cost $400,000 to fight, but they had a 70 per cent chance of winning.

"If these guys are telling you you've got a 70 per cent chance and you lose that decisively, I sure don't want them placing bets for me at the tables anywhere," said Bloess.

The city has a vital interest in limiting far-flung suburbs, which strain our resources to service and add more commuters to the roads, with an attendant increase in congestion and pollution, but it was risky to disregard the advice and research of city staff.

While it rankles many (like me) to see the city's elected officials second-guessed by the big, bad OMB, council could perhaps refrain from leading with its chin as it did in this fight.

Worth mentioning

LONDON. Scientists are quickly combing the DNA of the killer bacteria behind the world's worst E. coli outbreak to find clues about how to treat patients and prevent future epidemics.

So far, one strain from a German patient has been sequenced by Chinese and German scientists. While the genetic information is preliminary, experts say there are a few hints about where the bacteria came from and why it might be so lethal.

The E. coli causing Europe's massive outbreak is likely the product of another strain first detected a decade ago in Germany, but with some dangerous mutations, experts say.

Because E. coli is constantly evolving, it is riddled with genes swapped from other strains found in animals and humans, giving it countless opportunities to acquire something lethal.

So far, the bug has killed at least 35 people and sickened more than 3,000, including several hundred who have developed life-threatening kidney failure.

Another twist on definition of the arts

Getting a lap dance isn't the same as taking in a ballet, so an alcohol-free strip club will have to pay the tax man, a New York state court has ruled.

Four Appellate Division justices agreed with a state tax appeals commission's earlier finding that dances onstage or in private rooms at the club Nite Moves in suburban Albany, N.Y., don't qualify for a state tax exemption as "dramatic or musical arts performances."

Nite Moves contested a tax bill of nearly $125,000 plus interest on lap dances and admission fees stemming from a 2005 audit. Its attorney, W. Andrew McCullough said Friday the club has a later, larger bill it is also challenging, and that he would probably appeal the Appellate Division ruling.

McCullough said the impact of the ruling probably won't be widespread since most establishments featuring exotic dancers as entertainment are bars mainly selling alcohol where other tax rules apply. "We admit the ballet is a little different and maybe a little more finely tuned," McCullough said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Double whammy for Lily Allen

It was a big weekend for singer Lily Allen. First, she married longtime boyfriend Sam Cooper, who then used the wedding's reception as the perfect opportunity to announce that his new bride is pregnant, according to the Daily Mail. "There were tears all around," a source says.

"This is the happiest day of Lily and Sam's lives and they are so in love. This is the icing on the wedding cake."

Allen is reportedly thrilled but cautious, given that last November she tragically suffered a miscarriage.

"Lily's scared, there's a long way to go," says a source, adding that Allen is about three months along. "But the happiness outweighs the fear." METRO

Of fathers lost and found

Estrangements can make Father's Day a quiet day for many families, but reunions can be oh so sweet Here are stories of lives touched by fathers being reunited with their kids

Amy's story

Amy, 39, always knew she was adopted from a private orphanage in Taiwan soon after her birth.

Her adoptive parents, Paul and Marjorie Ropp from the United States were living in Taiwan at the time. They had met Amy's birth father as part of the adoption process in 1972. He was a building custodian devastated by the death of his wife from complications during Amy's birth.

Amy's parents shared with her what they knew of her birth story, but none of it mattered to her growing up. It was only in 1994, after she gave birth to a son, that Amy grew interested in finding her birth father.

All Amy had to go on was an old address her birth father had left behind when he relinquished her nearly 40 years ago. As the search went on, the Ropps enlisted the aid of friends who ran an orphanage in Taiwan about an hour's drive from where Amy was born. The friends asked for help from two Hualien police officers who had passed through their orphanage doors as children. The search moved quickly and Zhen-yi Wu — Amy's birth father — turned up.

Around Christmas in 2009, Amy met her birth family. "I just hugged them all," she said. "They said, 'We've been waiting 40 years.'"

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Amy Ropp

In 2008, Marni Morrison's world turned upside down.

That's the year she decided to contact her birth mother, who told her that contrary to her adoption file, her birth father was very much alive.

"I said, 'what are you talking about?' because in my mind he had been dead all that time," said the 42-year-old mother of two daughters, ages 19 and 12. "I'm still trying to get it through my head that he's alive. You're told something your whole life and there's a lot of rewiring that goes on with this whole experience."

Marni grew up in suburban Minneapolis and lives in Red Wing, Minn. She was adopted at birth, the little sister of three much-older brothers born to her adoptive parents.

She'd had access to her adoption file since turning 18, but had no interest in looking at it until after becoming a mother herself, when she felt the need to check on potential health issues for her children.

She didn't find any health worries. Instead, she stumbled on a trail of lies. The file included a letter written by her birth mother in 1969 that said both her birth parents were medical students who'd planned to marry, but her birth father died in a motorcycle accident, "and it was too hard for her to keep me so she put me up for adoption," Marni said.

"I had always dreamed of being a father but just believed it wasn't going to happen. I look at this as a gift of a lifetime."

MARK SHAW, FATHER OF MARNI MORRISON, WHO WAS GIVEN UP FOR ADOPTION AFTER SHE WAS BORN

None of it was true, but she didn't know that until she found her birth mother and they spoke for the first time.

"She said, 'Your birth father not dead. He's a lawyer in Illinois.'"

Marni said her mother wrote the letter in an era when single mothers were often pressured to give up their babies or risk ruining their lives.

"It's very much a fairy-tale type of letter. It's a very comforting story of love," she said.

Marni and her husband, James, Googled the name her birth mother had given them for her birth father, Mark Shaw.

Two people popped up, but only one was in the right age range. But they dropped the hunt when her adoptive dad got sick. He passed away in July 2009. "He had been a rock my whole life," she said.

Nine months later, James came across a book written by someone named Mark Shaw as he searched online for advice on how to publish a play. He clicked on the author's website and staring back in a photo was a man with the same gap in his teeth as his wife.

James sent Shaw an email asking whether he had practiced law in Illinois around the time of Marni's birth. The answer was yes. The hunch was confirmed by a paternity test, and father and child now see each other every month.

"I've been in a daze for the last year," Marni said. "We recently updated our insurance policy and I can offer all my information now. I've never been able to do that."

As for Mark Shaw, he said he barely knew Marni's mother.

"This was the 1960s. I was moving around like I have my whole life — so fast," the 65-year-old author, legal analyst and seminary graduate said tearfully.

He welcomed Marni, her husband and his new-found grandchildren with open arms. He even wrote a book about his unusual path to fatherhood, Road to a Miracle.

"I had always dreamed of being a father but just believed it wasn't going to happen," said Shaw, who is married and lives in Superior, Colo. "I look at this as the gift of a lifetime."

Quesadillas with an avocado twist

These chicken quesadillas are kicked up with avocado for a tasty and fresh take on the Mexican favourite

Don't be discouraged by the number of ingredients in this recipe for Mexican quesadillas. The recipe comes together in 40 minutes and is served with avocado citrus cream.

For a warm weather party, this will serve eight guests and it is worth the preparation.

Ingredients:

Chicken Quesadillas
- 375 ml (1 1/2 cups) shredded roasted chicken
- 175 ml (3/4 cup) canned black beans, drained
- 1 bunch green onions, white and light green parts only, thinly sliced
- 1 bunch cilantro, roughly chopped
- 45 ml (3 tbsp) minced, canned chipotle chilies
- 30 ml (2 tbsp) red wine vinegar
- 15 ml (1 tbsp) extra-virgin olive oil
- 5 ml (1 tsp) salt
- 2 ml (1/2 tsp) freshly ground black pepper
- 375 ml (1 1/2 cups) grated Mexican manchego cheese
- 250 ml (1 cup) grated panela cheese
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) grated cotija cheese
- 4 flour tortillas (each 25 cm/10 inches in diameter)
- 30 ml (2 tbsp) unsalted butter, melted
- 1 1/2 ripe, fresh avocados seeded and cut into 5-mm (1/4-inch) slices

Avocado Citrus Cream
- 1 ripe fresh avocado, seeded, peeled and quartered
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) light sour cream
- 1 lime, juiced
- 1/2 orange, juiced
- Salt and black pepper, to taste

Preparation:

1. Quesadillas: In a mixing bowl, combine chicken, black beans, onions, cilantro, chilies, vinegar, oil, salt and pepper. Let sit for 20 minutes to blend flavours.
2. In a bowl, mix cheeses together.
3. Lay tortillas on a clean counter or other work surface and brush with melted butter.
4. Place a large skillet over medium-high heat. Place a tortilla, buttered side down, into skillet and place one-quarter of the cheese mixture over entire tortilla. Place one-quarter of the chicken mixture over half of the tortilla, leaving the other half empty. Cover chicken mixture with one-quarter of the avocado slices. Cook until cheese begins to melt, 3 to 4 minutes.
5. Fold tortilla in half over avocado and chicken mixture. Continue cooking until tortilla is lightly golden on both sides and cheese begins to ooze. Repeat with remaining quesadillas and ingredients.
6. Avocado Citrus Cream: Meanwhile, combine ingredients in a blender or food processor and blend until smooth.
7. Cut quesadillas into wedges; serve with cream.

Bacon & beans prove simple can be great

Want to build a better salad? Lose the chill, ditch some of the fruit and get the proportions of the vinaigrette right.

That's the advice of Jacques Pepin, star of a new public television series — Essential Pepin — that will air in the fall.

Pepin says a great salad can be simple as long as the ingredients are fresh and the proportions are right. Too much fruit produces a salad that is too sweet. Likewise, most salads taste best when served cool, but not cold.

"Also important is the use of great-quality oils and vinegars," he said. "And these should be mixed in the proper ratios: one part vinegar to three parts oil, or one part vinegar to four parts oil."

Pepin offers a warm salad of bacon or pancetta tossed with white beans. It is a hearty salad but still feels fresh thanks to a generous use of vinegar and chopped fresh parsley.

"I love beans," he said. "When they are combined with pancetta and seasoned with vinegar, garlic and olive oil, the result is a salad that is almost like a stew."

Ingredients:
- 250 g (8 oz) slab bacon or pancetta, cut into 1-cm (1/2-inch) pieces
- 1 medium onion, chopped (about 250 ml/1 cup)
- 6 garlic cloves, crushed and chopped
- 2 cans (398 ml/14 oz) navy or other small white beans, rinsed and drained
- 2 ml (1/2 tsp) salt
- 125 ml (1/2 cup) chopped fresh parsley
- 45 ml (3 tbsp) red wine vinegar
- 45 ml (3 tbsp) olive oil
- 5 ml (1 tsp) ground black pepper

Preparation:

1. In saucepan over low heat, place bacon. Sauté, covered, for 8 minutes, or until meat has rendered much of its fat. Add onion and garlic and cook, stirring, for about 5 seconds.
2. Transfer contents of saucepan, fat and all, to a large bowl. Add beans, salt, parsley, vinegar, oil and pepper. Mix well, then serve warm or at room temperature.

Green school grants help kids across Canada build a greener future for themselves in their own backyard

BEN KNIGHT
GREEN@METRONEWS.CA

Small ideas can lead to big changes. That's why WWF-Canada has teamed up with Loblaw to offer Green CommUnity School Grants to students and schools who want to help build a cleaner, greener world.

"We developed the program to tap into the excitement, passion and sense of community that comes with schools," says Christina Topp, WWF VP of marketing and communications.

"To drive everyday change in the school environment, and in the broader community."

Composting, gardening, solar energy, recycling programs — any innovative idea from any school, anywhere in Canada, can receive up to $5,000 in financial backing.

"We've been doing this program for two years, and it's great fun to look at the applications," says Topp.

"Bike recycling programs, and gardens, and worm recycling! It's phenomenal."

Grants have been awarded to large inner-city schools, tiny one-room schoolhouses, and almost every kind of classroom across Canada.

"You'll have students doing everything from biodiversity and natural projects outside to solar panels, to creating bio-fuel buses," Topp enthuses.

"Whatever the problem is, they're thinking about it and coming up with solutions."

Peggy Hornell, senior director of community investment at Loblaw, says the program arose from one of the supermarket chain's ongoing environmental efforts.

From schools to sponsors, this simple, open-ended program is impressing and delighting everyone who gets involved.

"There is certainly room for expansion," Topp concludes.

"But with kids — if we get them to adopt green ways of living from childhood — we don't need to change behaviours. It just becomes the everyday way they live."

So why are we still wasting millions of pages annually on printing essays?

Toward a paperless post-secondary

HO-CAPE BRETON UNIVERSITY/THE CANADIAN PRESS

▶ Todd Pettigrew, left, an English literature professor, says grading papers electronically allows him to provide students with more extensive feedback.

With everything from shopping to global communication available at the click of a mouse, it's surprising that the archaic practice of handing in printed papers has endured at most Canadian universities. After all, institutions of higher learning are supposed to be hotbeds of innovation.

Todd Pettigrew, an English literature professor at Cape Breton University in Nova Scotia, sums it up this way: "Habit."

"I think that's why I didn't do it earlier. I was just in the habit of getting papers on paper and grading them with a pen. I had always done it that way, so I hadn't really thought about going completely paperless," Pettigrew said.

"There may be still a lingering sense that things that don't exist on hard copy are somehow not as real as things that are in a physical paper form that you can touch," he added.

Last fall, a colleague at McMaster University in Hamilton inspired Pettigrew to begin asking his students to email him their essays as Word files. Pettigrew wrote electronic comments, graded the papers, turned the files into PDFs and emailed them back.

Using email allowed him to have a clear record of when students had sent their papers in and an easy way to keep them on file for the rest of the year. It also eliminated the hassle of lugging stacks of paper around and trying to return essays to students who weren't in class.

"There may be still a lingering sense that things that don't exist on hard copy are somehow not as real as things that are in physical form that you can touch. "
TODD PETTIGREW, ENGLISH LITERATURE PROFESSOR

The process is also easier for students, who no longer need to squint at their professor's hand-written chicken scratch in the margins of their papers.

"Submitting something online means I won't have to rescue my paper from the giant piles when everyone is asked to pick them up after class all at once," said Krislyn Fernandes, 23, a recent graduate of the health sciences program at the University of Ottawa.

Fernandes submitted a number of her class assignments using an online system called Blackboard. She prefers submitting her papers this way because it's faster and allows her more flexibility, she said.

Virtual papers are pretty mundane stuff to a generation raised on Internet technology. Hayleigh Wronski, who only submitted work electronically once during her English degree at Ottawa's Carleton University, says she found the process no different than submitting papers the regular way.

"I like the decreasing paper usage," said Wronski. "Otherwise it was just like how we usually submit things."

Pettigrew said he doesn't see himself ever returning to paper.

"I find that the comments that I write on the electronic papers are better quality because I'm not worried about trying to fit them in the margins or in between lines," he said.

Grading papers electronically also gives him the option of adding web links into the comments.

So a student having trouble with commas, for instance, can receive a link to a website that explains proper usage.

"There's a lot of potential with paperless grading," Pettigrew said. "I think I'm still discovering that."

But some professors may be hesitant because they think electronic grading means using complicated software and dealing with glitches.

"Probably in another generation or two, I think people will see it as old-fashioned to expect students to print out an essay and physically carry it to the university," said Pettigrew.

"That will seem sort of quaint in time. But universities change slowly, and that's not necessarily a bad thing." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Power of paper

One teacher's test round.

- Professor Todd Pettigrew estimates that he saved 750 sheets of paper last year, in just one section of one full-year course at one small university.
- "You apply that to a whole university and it's hundreds of thousands of pages of paper," Pettigrew said.
- "You apply that to the whole country and you're talking about millions of sheets of paper that we really don't need to use."

"Being an entrepreneur is having a vision and sticking to it. Sometimes you're on the edge of insanity but I think the companies that succeed are the people that push through the hard times and make it."

Tammy Lawrence and husband Dave knew they were on to something big 15 years ago when they started developing organic lawn-care products. They were ahead of the curve and the pesticide bans that would sweep across Canada. Years of costly research and development followed and now their company, Turf Revolution, based in Ayr, Ont., is set to grow 74 per cent this year. The business is exciting and they just expanded into the U.S. market, but Tammy admits guiding a company through the recent global recession has taken a huge toll on their lives.

"I wish we had known about the unexpected costs. We didn't anticipate how much growth we would have and how much cash flow we would need but I feel the breakthrough is around the corner. We just have to keep forging ahead."

The real side of retail

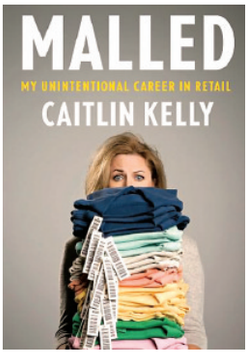
BOOK REVIEW

CRAIG LUND
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

Recall your most recent shopping trip, and chances are your experience whether positive or negative was most likely influenced by your interaction with a retail sales associate.

Caitlin Kelly, a veteran journalist facing declining opportunities for quality paying writing assignments, picked up a retail gig in an upscale neighbourhood mall to create some additional part-time income. In her book, Malled, she journals her two year retail stint.

"I have never worked in any job that paid so little for such hard work," says



Kelly.

Even though 70 per cent of the U.S. economy relies on its GDP from consumer spending, "retail sales associates, clerks, floor walkers, team members – whatever you choose to call them – remain oddly invisible in the media." Kelly's book offers some sobering insights into this gruelling and highly under appreciated job. Kelly attributes the silence because "most workers doing these tough jobs for low wages are those least able to afford losing them... they have powerful incentive to remain silent."

The fact however is that companies that have figured out how to keep their staff happy by providing fair wages, benefits, training and a safe work environment clearly outperform their competitors. Why? When over 85 per cent of buying decisions take place at the store a "lousy or lazy clerk can send you spinning right back onto the street, frustrated, empty-handed, and indignant."

Told from the perspective of an experienced professional, Kelly's insights offer a sympathetic look into the backrooms of the gleaming sales floors we peruse... I for one will certainly be more patient and friendly on my next shopping trip.

Is long wait almost over?

Canucks poised to become first Canadian team in 18 years to bring home the Stanley Cup

The last time a Canadian-based team won the Stanley Cup — the Montreal Canadiens in 1993 — it was no big deal.

Well, it was a really big deal if you were a fan of the Canadiens, who caused a surprise by reaching the final and then dispatching Wayne Gretzky's Los Angeles Kings in five games to claim their record 24th cup. Big enough that there was a riot in downtown Montreal after the cup-clinching game.

But in those days, a Canadian team winning it all was the norm rather than the exception.

If the Vancouver Canucks beat the Boston Bruins this season, it would end an 18-year cup drought for the country that lives and dies with hockey. And it would end a jinx that saw the 1994 Canucks, 2004 Calgary Flames, 2006 Edmonton Oilers and 2007 Ottawa Senators all lose in the final.

When Montreal last drank from the silver bowl, it ended Mario Lemieux and the Pittsburgh Penguins' two-year reign. But before that, the cup had been won seven straight years by Canadian teams — five by the Oilers and one each by Montreal (1986) and Calgary (1989).

"There's 30 teams in the league now and every year it's very competitive," Vincent Damphousse, the scoring leader on the 1993 Montreal team, said this week. "It's not like the 1950s or '60s where you could build a team and keep it together and have a dynasty."

"I think you'll see a lot of teams going 20, 30, 40 years without winning now."
VINCENT DAMPHOUSSE ON THE DIFFICULTY OF WINNING THE CUP

The 1992-93 Canadiens rode other-worldly goaltending from Patrick Roy and a record 10 consecutive overtime victories to a cup few gave them any chance of winning after a regular season in which they finished third in what was then called the Adams Division, behind Boston and detested rival the Quebec Nordiques.

General manager Serge Savard had made two key pre-season acquisitions, picking up scoring forwards Damphousse and Brian Bellows, to add scoring punch to a group led by centre Kirk Muller, captain Guy Carbonneau, gritty winger Mike Keane and promising young winger John LeClair.

The top defence pair had point man Mathieu Schneider and tough guy Lyle Odelein, followed by Eric Desjardins and Jean-Jacques Daigneaut.

▶ Canucks defenceman Aaron Rome was suspended for four games after a late hit on Nathan Horton of the Bruins last week.

Rome says he'd likely hammer Horton again

Given the chance to level Nathan Horton again, Aaron Rome would probably make the same play that got him kicked out of the Stanley Cup final.

The Vancouver Canucks defenceman ended his silence after practice yesterday and made it clear that he still doesn't understand why the NHL handed him a four-game suspension for hammering Horton with a late hit in Game 3.

"If I could go back, I'd wish he didn't get hurt but I don't think it would change my decision on the play," said Rome. "I've got to step up and be physical, that's part of my game. It's just unfortunate."

The suspension he received from league vice-president Mike Murphy is the longest in the history of the Stanley Cup final.

Horton suffered a concussion on the play and is out for the series. Rome attempted to reach the Bruins forward with text messages but didn't receive a response.

Rome has continued practising with his teammates even though he's not eligible to return to the lineup until next season.

Today's horoscope

For today's crossword answers and for expanded horoscopes, go to metronews.ca

♈ Aries March 21-April 20 Now is the time to say sorry and get things back to how they used to be.

♉ Taurus April 21-May 21 Lighten up and stop worrying about things that are unlikely to happen, now or in the future.

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21 Something that only a short time ago seemed to be difficult if not impossible will now seem ridiculously easy.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22 Family problems will be less intense as from today.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug.23 If there is something you have wanted to say but felt unable to put into words you'll get past that blockage today.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24- Sept. 22 If you have been deceiving yourself about the true state of your money situation the truth will come out today.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23 So many of the things you have been getting uptight about are not worth the effort.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22 Don't waste time looking back and regretting what happened. Look forward and start making things happen.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21 Dreaming is one thing – doing can be a bit more of a challenge.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 Make sure important people know you exist and what you can do.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 Something you have always believed in may not be as simple as you had assumed.

♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20. You have not made the most of your resources of late, but you can still do something about it.
